Supervisors call for hearing on reports of Treasure Island radiation threat

By Joshua Sabatini
San Francisco Examiner
September 5, 2012

Newly reported cases of potential radiation on Treasure Island have raised alarm and prompted the Board of Supervisors on Wednesday to call for a hearing next week to address the reports.

The City is preparing to take over ownership of the island from the U.S. Navy for a purchase price of $100 million to make way for 8,000 homes, a hotel and an upgraded marina. The deal requires the Navy to clean up the island's contamination, work that must be approved by state regulatory health agencies.

But recent reports in both the Bay Citizen and the East Bay Express have suggested there is more radiological contamination on the island than once thought, revealing tension between the state agencies and the Navy over cleanup.
